Nehrling's gardens receive state heritage marker

Residents, Nehrling Gardens officials and volunteers, as well as politicians, gathered for the dedication ceremony of the Florida Heritage Landmark Marker for Henry Nehrling's Palm Cottage Gardens last Thursday morning at Nehrling Gardens in Gotha.

The dedication ceremony was led by Orange County Commissioner Scott Boyd. The special event demonstrated Nehrling Gardens' significance to the state of Florida: May 9 is symbolic not only because it marked Henry Nehrling's 160th birthday, but it also commemorates the Orange County Board of County Commissioners' proclamation of May 9, 2009, as Henry Nehrling

Day.

The Florida Heritage Landmark Marker for Palm Cottage Gardens was made possible by the support of the Henry Nehrling Society, Rotary Club of Windermere, Bloom & Grow Garden Society, Windermere Garden Club and the Florida Department of State.

Nehrling Gardens is owned and operated by a local nonprofit volunteer organization whose focus is rehabilitating Dr. Nehrling's historic home and gardens, creating new teaching gardens and providing a historical, horticultural and environmental enrichment center for the

Gray's command also went into Japanese airports and gathered equipment, and they sometimes would go on fact-finding missions, as well. It was a "funny time," Gray said. Japanese occupation in Indonesia would prove a crucial factor in helping the country

Henry Nehrling was an internationally renowned horticulturalist, naturalist, botanist, ornithologist and writer known as the "patron saint of Florida gardens." Dr. Nehrling introduced and tested more than 3,000 new and rare species of plants and trees, as well as Florida native plants. More than 300 of these became essential to Florida's horticulture industry, including caladiums, palms, bamboos, magnolias and amaryllis. Nehrling's gardens became a mecca for plant lovers and a tourist destination in the early 1900s. It was visited by many prominent people, including Theodore Roosevelt, Thomas Edison and several renowned horticulturists. His most notable works include
